

Let's try to understand the message COVID-19 brought to us

In the natural struggle for survival, our science and technology make from us, the humans, predators of other living creatures on the planet using unfair weapons. Until recently, there was balance in the World. The Creator - mother Earth, as every good mother, loves all its creatures equally. This World was designed to be regulated by Nature Laws. Even such a thing as the coronavirus is a Divine creature and if we thought a little, we would understand that Nature is using it to give us a message. As for me, I understand the message as follows:

You are too many, you are overpopulated, it is necessary to do something about it.

And for this I can use your mindless travelling up and down, here and there, all over the planet. It will at least this time serve a purpose.

Don't be afraid, I just need to cut down your numbers a bit and remind you that I will always be at the minimum one step ahead of you, even when you think that you are already in the lead.

I won't allow you to destroy the World unity, I didn't create it only for you as you boast in your pride, but also for other beings and for my own pleasure.

I'm not very happy with you. And if you make me angry...

Then I'll clean it up somehow after you! I do have infinite amount of time, you don't.

If the “divine warriors” such as COVID-19 don't destroy us, we will destroy ourselves.

We have created countless possibilities to achieve that. Something escaping from our control can be enough. Like the virtual tornado that we, the humans, have been feeding through our computers and mobiles to which we've become addicted.

Lives of human beings progressing in a maddening tempo have been turning into a no-escape self-made trap.

The speed of its spinning will burn us out, making us unable to “keep pace with the times” already in our forties. Young people, some of whom are starting to understand where it's heading to intuitively, are trying to find solution in “cutting themselves off” at the moment. But I don't see it as the best solution for them. Indeed, in the course of time they'll become outcasts in the true sense of the word. They'll be deprived of their rights in the society in which they'll go on living physically, though on the margin, left only to themselves. They'll have zero chances of survival. The same as those, for the society redundant - all those people unable to keep pace with the times and that's why cast off by this society.

We can imagine the life of the people “conforming to the times” as in a virtual tornado hitting every living creature on Earth. At the end, it’ll lose its strength, maybe because of a simple reason, that in the speed the humans will lose their reproductive capacity, and then, it’ll spit the last rubble of our civilization from its bowels, installing a Great Silence over the Earth.

Here are the first signs suggesting that my words of warning are making sense. Take for example elderly people, who aren’t able to handle some mobile phone models at present. But the older types can’t be bought any more. They aren’t able, they can’t buy a train ticket on the Internet. And there are the trains here for which you simply can’t buy a ticket otherwise...

Even though I don’t think that it can be stopped, I’m making an appeal to people, especially the young ones from all over the World, whose genius brains are behind the crazy present-day race, to give up the elation from the Godlike feeling of becoming discoverers and creators of possibilities how to achieve still higher and higher speed by means of new technologies, and to focus primarily on protection and conservation of Nature values of the Earth that include also the human being, and so consequently them, too.

Globalization has many shadowy sides. One fact is that unlike our grandparents and great grandparents who dealt only with their small communities’ affairs of their villages and towns, we, as a part of the globalized World, are interested now also in the things that are not of immediate concern to us.

The other thing is that the solutions to our local problems are influenced not only by the regional and state level politicians but also by the representatives of powers such as the European Union, which slows down naturally the solution of our local problems. It also happens that the ones who have the right to speak into our affairs, can’t understand our problems, because they are embedded in a different culture and have a different nature.

The media, mobiles and social networks are instruments of globalization compelling us to follow incessantly the development in the World. And it happens that we think about the affairs, the same as me just now, the solution of which is beyond our strength. And then we lack focus to solve our own problems. The big problems and big challenges often overshadow the small ones that should be handled primarily by the people involved, and in the place where they live.

What sense will it have for us to know almost everything, but, due to the wrong direction that we have been taking, not to have time to live the life for which we had been created!?
